SCIENTIFIC FORESTRY

Vanderbilt's Noteworthy Object Lesson at Biltmore-4,000 Acres of Trees Cultivated with Valuable Results.

In an article on the Biltmore estate in Ainslee's magazine for May, Philip Poindexter describes interestingly Mr. Vanderbilt's lesson in scientific forest

"We have been criminally wasteful in our treatment of the forests in America. Ourgreat-grandfathers looked upon the forest as the great en-emy of man, and so vast areas were destroyed to get arable land, and the wood wantonly burned to get it out of the way. Later, the lumber and the tanning interests have been just as wanton in their destruction, and now the paper makers are destroying in most wholesale fashion. As a matter of fact, all the good that has come from this forest destruction might have been achieved, and a very much larger area of woodland preserved. But we have been a 'slap-dash people, with a disposition to hustle rapidly to whatever end in view. We are suffering now by reason of previous improvidence, and posterity will not bless us for our pres-ent recklessness. It is true the gov-ernment has taken up the subject, through the department of agriculture, and several of the states have taken action to preserve some public forests. Mr. Vanderbilt is the first private owner to take up this matter of scientific forest administration on a large scale. Scientific administration does not, it must be borne in mind, contemplate the non-use of the trees, but the rational use, so that the forests will not go out of existence, but, on the e-mirary, so that new growths will al-ways be maturing to take the place of the old. Such administration also contemplates that the forests should always be a source of income, and not one of outlay, more income, indeed, than would be obtained by cutting down all the trees and marketing the various kinds of wood. It was such administration that Mr. Vanderbilt wished to inaugurate when he asked Mr. Gifford Pinchot to make a survey of the Biltmore forests and develop a plan of management.

ALL SORTS OF TREES.

'Lying near the centre of the distribution of the flora of Eastern North America, the supply of native trees at Biltmore is naturally large and varied. Deciduous tr and the whi mon. Then f quency in t scarlet oak. are also a fev bers of the fa the red, wat quent membe chestnut oak chestnut. his and tulip tr called the 3 locust and th of late years has about di-

"Not all of these have a mercantile value, and before the estate was pur-chased by Mr. Vanderbilt they were allowed to grow indiscriminately and in the most promiscuous fashion by the number of small farmers who owned the properties of which the estate is made up. That so many varicties of trees and shrubs will thus grow naturally is of advantage in view of the fact that Mr. Vanderbilt is establishing here one of the most complete arboretums in the world.

VALUABLE RESULTS.

"The forest comprises a little over 3 a one-half of the estate, which stretches along the banks of the French Broad for about six miles. In all, there are 5,891 acres of woodland. The forest is very irregular, as a result of the clearing operation of the many pre-vious owners, all of whom had their own necessities and their own ideas of how land should be cleared. The axe has in some parts entirely denuded the land of trees, and fire has served a similar purpose in other portions. Density of growth, therefore, varies considerably, both as to the young and mature trees. Two things have at least been done at the forest. These are that large trees, surrounded by a dense growth of smaller ones, may be felled and removed with comparatively very unimportant injury to the young crop, and that the additional cost of the necessary care beyond that of ordinary destructive lumbering is so small as to be out of all proportion to the result. If this latter fact should be established later on in other parts of the United States, its importance to the future success of intelligent forestry will be of inestimable value to owners of woodlands.

"This selection system will be carried on over the two-thirds of the estate that is situated on the west side of the French Broad. On the other side of the river the regular high forest system is to be adopted. There the land has been divided into ninetyland has been divided into ninetycally perfect forest, the trees will be cut in one section after another in rotation until the whole ninety-two sections have been cut, when work will again begin on Section 1, and be followed year after year, until the whole ninety-two sections have again been gone over with, when the rota-tion work will begin again. Mr. Vanderbilt, young man though he still is, can hardly expect to see this plan car-ried out and the theory of a perfect forest growth proved. That will be left to his heirs."

Couldn't Possibly.

"Nathaniel, the teacher writes me a note and mage Katie is showing indications of astigmatism." "Astigmatism."
"You tell him he's mistaken. She went through that when she was a baby."—Chirago Trabune. TREASURER'S SALE
